

31.10.2024 French Erasmus+ student highlights inclusion and sustainability efforts in her school and country

At Liceo Machiavelli today, a 17-year-old French student participating in the Erasmus+ long-term mobility (LTM) program gave an engaging presentation, both in French and in English, on her school and country, highlighting some key European priorities: inclusion, diversity, and environmental sustainability.

During her talk, she described how her school in France actively promotes inclusion and diversity by embracing students from varied backgrounds. The school offers support services to ensure that all students have equal learning opportunities. The Italian students could appreciate how these efforts align with the EU's commitment to social equity and cohesion.

On environmental sustainability, the student explained how her school has adopted eco-friendly initiatives, such as recycling programs and school-wide campaigns encouraging students to reduce waste. She also mentioned how the French education system is incorporating environmental topics into the curriculum, teaching students about climate change, conservation, and sustainable practices. The French students' involvement in local environmental clubs and community clean-up projects reflects a commitment to making a difference.

This student's presentation underscored France's alignment with European values and goals, showing how her school is preparing students to be both socially responsible and environmentally conscious European citizens.
